ORANGE AND GREEN.

NEVADA has a happy way of promoting amity and concord without regard for religious differences and the men in Ulster are invited to write to the secretary of the Grattan Club to find how to do it. The Grattan Club was organized in Southern Nevada during the boom of 1906, when men of all classes flocked hither for the purpose of gathering a share of the wealth that was supposed to be strewn on the surface of the ground. Most of the early comers were freebooters of finance but there was also a group of educated, broad minded men who could not be brought to see the justice of neighbors harboring evil thoughts of one another. As a goodly proportion of these good fellows came from Irish stock they naturally drifted together for social purposes. When the patriots of Irish descent began to take the measure of their fellows they found there were Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists and Episcopalians. At this stage of acquaintance it was suggested that all get together for mutual enjoyment and to make the most of their chance meeting in the deserts of Nevada. This led to the organization of the Grattan Club and the adoption of orange and green as the colors of the association. Religion and politics were barred from discussion and everybody was as happy as could be. Rev. J. P. Byers, pastor of a Presbyterian church, was president and Rev. Father J. B. Dermody was first vice president. The second year the positions were changed and the Catholic padre became president and the man from Ulster was relegated to second place without the slightest friction. The change was made at the suggestion of the Presbyterian dominion and from that day until Mr. Byers was changed to Reno the club had no cause to regret the bringing of a lot of good fellows together in a peace pact.

DEATH VALLEY AS A RESORT.

THE jaded appetites of globe trotters who have been all the way from Kamehatka to the sacred city of Lhasa will have a new titbit offered by a Nevada railroad to tempt their fancy and tickle their curiosity for World's Fair year, if not sooner. Death Valley, that region of mythical horrors and teeming with stories and experiences of hunger, thirst and death in most violent form, is the latest comer for recognition.

It has long been under consideration by the Borax Smith interests and now the men behind the railroad interests controlled by the borax industry have come to a realization of the potentialities of the situation. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado draws tens of thousands every summer, impelled by a desire to view the wonders of Nature's abyssal chasm, and one railroad spends $100,000 a year for the sole purpose of advertising the attractions of that seismic upheaval so eloquent of the convulsion of eons ago. The canyon was brought out by expensive, judicious and persistent advertising, and the same people who were instrumental in placing that heel of Creation on the map are said to be ready and willing to boost Death Valley as a winter resort that cannot be rivalled on the face of the universe. Tradition invests the valley with legendary interest and the very panorama teems with a new zest to banish the languor of the idle rich seeking fresh pleasures to overcome the ennui of existence. The only drawback to travel in Death valley has been the difficulty of reaching the famous district that has stood on the map as the Land that God Forgot and man almost overlooked. The place has already been advertised in every school geography and every country store holds on its shelves pictures of the twenty mule teams that first pioneered the industrial development of that section. History tells of the destruction of the early Mormon emigrant train whose wreaths are said to haunt the awful gloom of the valley and shriek in agony from the lofty slopes of the well named Funeral range. Overwhelmed by a srocco the followers of Brigham Young went to death in a paroxysm of hopeless despair. Oxen, wagons, men and women, wives and daughters, babes in arms, all sank to doom as a propitiatory offering to the weather demons that have made the very name of Death valley bring a shudder to many circles safely ensconced in comfortable homes in Utah. The progenitors of the hardy race that hewed their way through the wilderness and established the stately capital of Salt Lake died while blazing the way to the Pacific coast and their numbers have been increased by hundreds of prospectors whose bones are found

Arbor Day Proclamation

In compliance with law and that custom of the people of the United States which sets apart one day in the year as a day of appreciation of the beneficent service of the vegetable kingdom to man—its answering to his need for food and shelter; its clothing of Nature in the beautiful garments of forestry and verdure, and its cultivation of his esthetic senses by its harmonies of forms and coloration—I, Tasker L. Oddie, governor of the State of Nevada, do hereby proclaim Friday, the 21st day of April, as Arbor Day to be observed by the public schools of this State in appropriate exercises tending to instill in the minds and hearts of our youths what we owe to the living world of plants, trees and flowers, and the response of Nature to the care of man when he plants the seed and tills the soil. I further recommend that the people of the State devote the day to the planting of trees upon the public streets and highways and in the improvement of their own premises to the end that the coming generation may receive from the present the legacy of innumerable trees—the value of which to the people of any commonwealth is beyond price.

By law of the State, Arbor Day is not a general holiday, and the application of this proclamation is limited to the public schools of Nevada.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Nevada. Done at Carson City, this 21st day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen.

TASKER L. ODDIE,

Governor.

By the governor:

GEORGE BRODIGAN

Secretary of State.

every now and then bleached to immaculate whiteness and tossed up by the sands of this restless land as the waves of the ocean bring back to earth the remains of those who perished in storm tossed waters.

The construction of the Death valley railroad will serve to carry the traveler to the upper rim of Death valley, where he may stand in safety and gaze out over that parous land with its shifting scenery and unparalleled atmospheric changes. This is the land where the mirage blooms and one can witness phenomena not to be seen elsewhere. The possibilities of making this a winter resort furnish a lure to capital that best knows the requirements of travel. All that is needed is the building of a couple of small hotels where the luxurious will find all the comforts of modern life and be assured of entertainment that they are willing to pay for. Death Valley is the last spot on a fast vanishing frontier that has not been exploited by the tourist, and the time is coming when it will prove one of the most lucrative investments in the itineraries of the wealthy sufferers from wanderlust.

Commercially other advantages are likely to accrue from the opening of this land to tourists. The visitors will have their curiosity to see the adjacent country whetted and it is not such a long ride from the valley to the world famous mining camps of Tonopah and Goldfield.

As an Eastern tenderfoot who landed in Death valley from Dagget described the dismal place, "I am now working in the Tombstone mine, on the western slope of the Funeral range, under Superintendent Coffin, and I am now on the graveyard shift."

Reno is shouting for home industries and urging every citizen of that town to rally to the support of the firms that help support Reno. In this connection it is well to call attention of Tonopah people to the traveling representative of an outfitting house that will have an agent in Tonopah to divert business from local merchants. If you want to see Tonopah prosper keep your money at home and see what you buy before you pay for it.

Instead of swatting the fly, try the system of cleaning up and ridding your premises of the fly breeders. Remember the day is Friday. If you don't succeed on that day, then do the work on Saturday.
